LINDEN, N.J., May 28, 2009 – Autolog Auto Transport (Autolog), a Linden, N.J.-based vehicle logistics provider and business unit of United Road, one of the largest vehicle transportation logistics providers in the United States, is now offering vehicle transport services between the Midwest and Southwest, along with the launch of extensive West Coast routes to accommodate growing cross country vehicle transportation needs. Larry Tolstyka, vice president of Autolog, made the announcement.

Autolog's newest initiative allows the company to expand its services to better accommodate vehicle transport between the Midwest and the West Coast, with an emphasis on Arizona. The company already has an existing client base with transport demands to and from the Southwest. Autolog is an experienced provider in the region, supplying customers with the safe and reliable vehicle transport known for alleviating long distance vehicle transport anxiety. An added incentive for those requiring transport to and from the Southwest, Autolog now offers protective enclosed truck service on routes between the Midwest and Phoenix, ensuring that vehicles are shielded from unwelcome road debris and hazardous weather conditions.

Additionally, Autolog is undergoing a vast expansion along the West Coast with the creation of new transport lanes between the Northwest and the Southwest. Widening its coverage reach, customers in the western United States are now able to cost-effectively fulfill their vehicle transport needs with Autolog.

Vehicle transportation to the western and southwest regions of the country greatly enhances Autolog's current customer options. The company has a history of reliable, single-unit transport service on the East Coast and has expanded its services to include the Midwest and now the western region of the United States.

"We are enthusiastic about providing expanded, top notch, secure vehicle transportation out west to consumers," said Tolstyka. "Utilizing the impeccable service of our team throughout the United States will allow us to seamlessly serve our loyal and growing client base requiring service between the Midwest and Arizona and along the West Coast.”
